1 WAYMO LLC,

2 No. C 17-00939 WHA

3 Plaintiff,

4 v.

5 UBER TECHNOLOGIES, INC., et al.,6 ORDER DENYING MOTION TO COMPEL ARBITRATION

7 Defendants.

8

9 INTRODUCTION10 Defendants seek to steer this case into arbitration even though they have no agreement
11 with anyone to arbitrate the case. Instead, they rely on a non-party's employment agreements 12 with plaintiff, which contained an arbitration clause, and attempt to invoke "equitable estoppel." 13 This order holds that defendants have not shown the elements necessary to justify application of 14 equitable estoppel.15 STATEMENT16 In 2009 and 2012, while working at Waymo LLC, Anthony Levandowski signed two 17 "At-Will Employment, Confidential Information, Invention Assignment and Arbitration 18 Agreement[s]." Each contained an arbitration clause that provided in relevant part (Dkt. No.
19 138-1 at 38, 50 (originals in all caps, emphasis added)):20 In consideration of my employment with the Company, its promise 21 to arbitrate all employment-related disputes, and my receipt of the 22 compensation, pay raises and other benefits paid to me by the 23 Company, at present and in the future, I agree that any and all

1 controversies, claims, or disputes with anyone (including the 2 Company and any employee, officer, director, shareholder or 3 benefit plan of the Company in their capacity as such or 4 otherwise), whether brought on an individual, group, or class basis, 5 arising out of, relating to, or resulting from my employment with 6 the Company or the termination of my employment with the 7 Company, including any breach of this agreement, shall be subject 8 to binding arbitration under the arbitration rules set forth in 9 California Code of Civil Procedure Section 1280 through 1294.2, 10 including section 1283.05 (the “Rules”) and pursuant to California 11 law. . . . I further understand that this agreement to arbitrate also 12 applies to any disputes that the Company may have with me.
 13

14 Pursuant to the 2009 and 2012 agreements, Waymo initiated two arbitration proceedings 15 against Levandowski on October 28, 2016, asserting claims for breach of contract, breach of 16 fiduciary duties or duties of loyalty, fraud-deceit, tortious interference with contract, tortious 17 interference with prospective economic advantage, unfair competition, and unjust enrichment 18 (Dkt. Nos. 138-1, 138-3). The gravamen of those proceedings is Waymo’s allegations of 19 employee poaching by Levandowski. Neither proceeding has anything to do with Waymo’s 20 claims of trade secret misappropriation against defendants here. As of the date of this order, 21 those arbitration proceedings remain the only proceedings by Waymo against Levandowski.
 22

23 Although our defendants — Uber Technologies, Inc., Ottomotto LLC, and Otto 24 Trucking LLC — are not signatories to either the 2009 or the 2012 agreement, they now wish to 25 take advantage of those agreements to compel Waymo to arbitrate this case based on “equitable 26 estoppel.” In addition to the instant motion to compel arbitration of Waymo’s trade secret 27 misappropriation and unfair competition claims, defendants initiated a new arbitration 28 proceeding against Waymo on March 31 of this year, seeking a declaration that said claims are
 (1) subject to arbitration and (2) meritless (Dkt. No. 243-1 ¶ 9).
 29

30 Both sides agree that, under the Federal Arbitration Act, defendants may enforce the 31 2009 and 2012 agreements only if the relevant state contract law permits them to do so (Dkt.
 32 Nos. 204 at 9; 243 at 2). See Arthur Andersen LLP v. Carlisle, 556 U.S. 624, 632 (2009); 33 Kramer v. Toyota Motor Corp., 705 F.3d 1122, 1128 (9th Cir. 2013). Both sides further agree 34 California law applies (Dkt. Nos. 125 at 7; 204 at 9).
 35

1 Contrary to defendants' suggestion, California law does not hold that a nonsignatory 2 may enforce the terms of an arbitration agreement merely because the agreement uses broad 3 language (see Dkt. No. 125 at 10–12). Actually, California law recognizes that nonsignatories 4 may enforce arbitration agreements only based on certain enumerated principles, none of which 5 turn on the broadness of an agreement's language. See Goldman v. KPMG LLP, 173 Cal. App.
 6 4th 209, 219–20 (2009). Nor does the liberal federal policy favoring arbitration help defendants 7 here, because "where the question is whether a particular party is bound by the arbitration 8 agreement, the liberal federal policy favoring arbitration agreements, which is best understood 9 as concerning the scope of arbitrable issues, is inapposite." Id. at 220 (citations omitted). In 10 short, defendants' motion turns not on the broad language of the arbitration clause at issue but 11 on their theory that equitable estoppel requires Waymo to submit to arbitration.

12 Under California law, a party that is not otherwise subject to an arbitration agreement 13 will be equitably estopped from avoiding arbitration only under two specific circumstances.
 14 Murphy v. DirecTV, Inc., 724 F.3d 1218, 1229 (9th Cir. 2013). Our court of appeals in Kramer
 15 adopted from Goldman the following controlling statement of California law on this issue:

16 Where a nonsignatory seeks to enforce an arbitration clause, the 17 doctrine of equitable estoppel applies in two circumstances:
 18 (1) when a signatory must rely on the terms of the written 19 agreement in asserting its claims against the nonsignatory or the 20 claims are intimately founded in and intertwined with the 21 underlying contract, and (2) when the signatory alleges 22 substantially interdependent and concerted misconduct by the 23 nonsignatory and another signatory and the allegations of 24 interdependent misconduct are founded in or intimately connected 25 with the obligations of the underlying agreement.

26 Kramer, 705 F.3d at 1128–29 (citing Goldman, 173 Cal. App. 4th at 221) (internal alterations, 27 citations, and quotations omitted). As our court of appeals more recently observed in Murphy, 28 the Goldman/Kramer standard remains the controlling law on this issue in our circuit. Murphy, 724 F.3d at 1229.

29 Significantly, the policy underlying the two Goldman prongs is intended to prevent a 30 plaintiff from having it both ways, i.e., seeking to hold a nonsignatory liable via duties imposed 31 by an agreement, while resisting arbitration called for by the same agreement on the ground that 32 the defendant is a nonsignatory. Murphy, 724 F.3d at 1229–30 (quoting Goldman, 173 Cal.

1 App. 4th at 220). Here, defendants have not shown that either Goldman prong is met, or that 2 Waymo's actions implicate the policy rationale for applying equitable estoppel.

3 With respect to the first Goldman prong, this order holds that Waymo need not rely on 4 the 2009 and 2012 agreements to prove its case against defendants, and that Waymo's claims 5 are not intimately founded in or intertwined with those agreements. With respect to the second 6 Goldman prong, Waymo's allegations of interdependent conduct by Levandowski and 7 defendants are not founded in or intimately connected with the obligations of the 2009 and 2012 8 agreements. Indeed, it appears Waymo can make out its case-in-chief without any reference to 9 either agreement. Defendants' counterarguments are unavailing.

10 With respect to the first Goldman prong, defendants argue that Waymo relies on the 11 2009 and 2012 agreements in asserting claims for trade secret misappropriation here (Dkt. No.
12 243 at 6–7). Specifically, defendants point out that Waymo “repeatedly invokes the 13 confidentiality provisions of its employment contracts” to show reasonable efforts to maintain 14 secrecy (id. at 6). But Waymo need not rely on the terms of its written agreements merely 15 because it makes reference to such agreements. See Goldman, 173 Cal. App. 4th at 218; see also Murphy, 724 F.3d at 1230–31 (that a plaintiff's claims may “on some abstract level require 16 the existence of” an arbitration agreement is not enough to establish equitable estoppel under 17 the first Goldman prong). To the contrary, Waymo has alleged and provided a sworn record of 18 how it takes reasonable measures to maintain secrecy. Some examples of those measures are 19 described in the companion order on Waymo's motion for provisional relief (see also, e.g., Dkt.
20 Nos. 23 at 17–18; 25–47 ¶ 25; 260 at 3 n.4). Additionally, during oral argument, Waymo 21 expressly forswore reliance on its 2009 and 2012 agreements with Levandowski to prove up its 22 claims. Since Waymo can show the reasonable measures element of its misappropriation claims 23 independent of the arbitration agreements in question, defendants have not shown that equitable 24 estoppel applies under Goldman. See Kramer, 705 F.3d at 1131 (“Looking to California 25 contract law, the correct analysis is whether [plaintiff] would have a claim independent of the 26 existence of the [agreement].”).

27

1 Next, and in a similar vein, defendants claim Waymo must “show that Mr. Levandowski 2 acquired the trade secrets through improper means, or that Uber derived its knowledge from 3 Mr. Levandowski, who owed a duty to Waymo to maintain the secrecy over (or limit the use of)
4 those alleged trade secrets. Thus, the [2009 and 2012] Agreements are central to Waymo’s 5 ability to prove liability under its trade secret claims” (Dkt. No. 243 at 8). Improper means, 6 however, are not limited to the violation of contractual obligations. See 18 U.S.C. 1839(6); 7 CAL. CIV. CODE § 3426.1. As stated, Waymo has expressly forsworn reliance on its agreements 8 with Levandowski. If Waymo can assert its misappropriation claims independent of the 9 existence of the 2009 and 2012 agreements, then it does not rely on those agreements for 10 purposes of equitable estoppel under Goldman. See Kramer, 705 F.3d at 1131.

11 Indeed, Waymo contends its misappropriation claims here are based, not on any 12 contractual obligation, but on Levandowski’s duty of loyalty under California law (Dkt. No.
13 204 at 13–14). See Huong Que, Inc. v. Luu, 150 Cal. App. 4th 400, 414, 416 (2007) (discussing 14 duty of loyalty between employee and employer). Indeed, the operative complaint contains 15 abundant allegations — and the record contains ample evidence — showing that Levandowski 16 breached that duty to Waymo. Defendants respond that “specific terms of a contract supersede 17 the general provisions of the common law,” citing out-of-state decisions for the proposition that 18 express contractual provisions can override common law obligations (Dkt. No. 243 at 7 & n.5).
19 But even if that proposition held true here, defendants have identified no express contractual 20 provision overriding Levandowski’s common law obligations. In short, while defendants stress 21 that Waymo’s allegations reference the arbitration agreements in question, they have still not 22 shown that Waymo must rely on those agreements such that equitable estoppel applies. See 23 Goldman, 173 Cal. App. 4th at 218; see also Murphy, 724 F.3d at 1230–31.

24 Turning to the second Goldman prong, defendants argue that Waymo alleges 25 substantially interdependent and concerted misconduct by defendants and Levandowski, and 26 that such allegations are founded in or intimately connected with Levandowski’s obligations 27 under the 2009 and 2012 agreements (Dkt. Nos. 125 at 7–9; 243 at 10–11). But “mere 28 allegations of collusive behavior between signatories and nonsignatories to a contract are not

1 enough to compel arbitration between parties who have not agreed to arbitrate. . . . It is the 2 relationship of the claims [to the contract], not merely the collusive behavior of the signatory
 3 and nonsignatory parties, that is key.” Murphy, 724 F.3d at 1231 (quoting Goldman, 173 Cal.
 4 App. 4th at 223).

5 Here, as stated, Waymo’s claims against defendants are not “dependent on or 6 inextricably bound up with the contractual obligations of the agreement[s] containing the 7 arbitration clause.” See id. at 1232. At bottom, defendants have not shown that Waymo relies 8 on the 2009 or 2012 agreements to assert its claims against defendants while simultaneously 9 seeking to avoid the arbitration clauses of those agreements. The inequities that equitable 10 estoppel is designed to address are simply not present. Accordingly, equitable estoppel does not 11 apply. See id. at 1231–32; Kramer, 705 F.3d at 1134; Goldman, 173 Cal. App. 4th at 232–33.

12 * * *

13 In their reply brief, defendants unfairly and for the first time identify “an entire body of 14 case law holding that a nonsignatory may compel a signatory to arbitrate its claims” (Dkt. No.
 15 243 at 2–3, 11–13). Every decision cited by defendants, however, is inapposite or readily 16 distinguishable. As illustrative examples, this order addresses four.

17 In Metalclad Corp. v. Ventana Environmental Organizational Partnership, Ventana 18 proposed to Metalclad that Ventana subsidiary Geologic would acquire Metalclad subsidiary 19 Esconsa, the holding company for Metalclad’s planned waste disposal project, in exchange for 20 Ventana’s investment in the project. 109 Cal. App. 4th 1705, 1709 (2003). Metalclad entered 21 into a written agreement with Geologic for the sale of Econsa with the understanding that 22 Ventana would honor its commitment to invest in the project. Id. at 1709–10. The sale 23 agreement included a broad arbitration clause. Metalclad then sued Ventana, Geologic, and 24 others for breach of contract, fraud, and related claims, alleging that Ventana had reneged on its 25 investment obligations. Id. at 1710. Ventana successfully moved to compel arbitration based 26 on equitable estoppel. Id. at 1713.

27 In Metalclad, equitable estoppel applied because Metalclad’s claims against Ventana 28 and Geologic, whether cast in tort or contract, were “based on the same facts and . . . inherently

1 inseparable" such that Metalclad effectively "[sought] the benefit of [its contract with Geologic] 2 in the form of damages from Ventana while avoiding its arbitration provision." Under those 3 circumstances, equitable estoppel prevented Metalclad from having it both ways. Id. at 4 1717–18. Here, in contrast, defendants had nothing to do with Waymo's 2009 and 2012 5 agreements with Levandowski. Waymo has dutifully brought its separate claims against 6 Levandowski (which concern employee poaching, not trade secret misappropriation) in 7 arbitration pursuant to those agreements. Moreover, its claims here are not dependent on or 8 inextricably bound up with those agreements. In short, unlike Metalclad, Waymo is not trying 9 to have it both ways.

10 In Turtle Ridge Media Group, Inc. v. Pacific Bell Directory, equitable estoppel required 11 the plaintiff to arbitrate with one defendant where that defendant had an arbitration agreement 12 with a second defendant, which arbitration agreement was expressly incorporated into a 13 separate subcontract between the plaintiff and the second defendant. 140 Cal. App. 4th 828, 14 831–34 (2006). Here, however, Waymo is not a party to any contract incorporating any 15 agreement to arbitrate with defendants. And unlike the allegations in Turtle Ridge, Waymo's 16 allegations here do not presuppose the existence of any "tripartite, on-going relationship" 17 benefitting defendants, Levandowski, and Waymo. See id. at 834. The reasoning for applying 18 equitable estoppel in Turtle Ridge is thus inapposite here.

19 In Uptown Drug Co., Inc. v. CVS Caremark Corp., the plaintiff's trade secret 20 misappropriation claims were "founded [in] and intertwined with the underlying contract 21 obligations" of an agreement containing an arbitration clause because, to prevail on those 22 claims, the plaintiff would have had to prove that a defendant's use of information exceeded the 23 scope of use expressly permitted under that agreement. 962 F. Supp. 2d 1172, 1185 (N.D. Cal.
 24 2013) (Judge Jon Tigar). Thus, under Kramer and Goldman, nonsignatories could compel that 25 plaintiff to arbitrate those claims on the basis of equitable estoppel. Ibid. In contrast, as stated, 26 Waymo need not rely on the arbitration agreements in question to prove the improper means 27 element of its misappropriation claims here. Thus, unlike the plaintiff in Uptown, Waymo is not 28

1 equitably estopped to resist arbitration of those claims against defendants with whom it had no 2 arbitration agreement.

3 In Torbit, Inc. v. Datanyze, Inc., Torbit asserted trade secret misappropriation claims 4 against a former employee, Ilya Semin, and his competing company, Datanyze, alleging that 5 Semin had downloaded and stolen Torbit's trade secrets and proprietary information for 6 Datanyze's use. No. 5:12-CV-05889-EJD, 2013 WL 572613, at *1-2 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 13, 7 2013) (Judge Edward Davila). Torbit and Semin had an agreement containing an arbitration 8 clause, to which Datanyze was not a signatory. Nonetheless, Datanyze successfully compelled 9 arbitration of Torbit's misappropriation claim against it because that claim was premised on 10 allegations that Datanyze knew or had reason to know that Semin had acquired Torbit's trade 11 secrets through improper means. Id. at *4. Specifically, Torbit concluded that equitable 12 estoppel applied because (1) if Datanyze knew that Semin acquired Torbit's trade secrets by 13 breaching his confidentiality obligations under the agreement, "proof of such knowledge would 14 plainly rely on interpretation of the Agreement and Mr. Semin's duties thereunder," and (2) 15 insofar as Datanyze knew that Semin acquired Torbit's trade secrets through other misconduct, 16 such misconduct "touch[ed] matters" covered by the agreement so as to be "intertwined with 17 the contract providing for arbitration." Ibid.

18 Defendants claim "Torbit compelled arbitration based on facts that are virtually identical 19 to those presented here" but gloss over the fact that Torbit relied on federal case law predating 20 the Supreme Court's holding in Carlisle. Torbit did not mention California law, Murphy, 21 Kramer, or Goldman. Defendants attempt to overcome this problem with a footnote that says, 22 "Kramer did not cite Torbit or say anything that was inconsistent with the holding and rationale 23 in Torbit" (Dkt. No. 243 at 11-12 & n.7). But Kramer did not cite Torbit for the simple reason 24 that it predated Torbit by approximately two weeks.

25 Significantly, the legal framework set forth by Goldman and adopted by our court of 26 appeals in Kramer and Murphy differs in numerous ways from the one used in Torbit. One such 27 difference suffices to produce a contrary outcome here. As stated, Torbit rejected Torbit's 28 attempt to show improper means without relying on its agreement with Semin, reasoning that

1 such a showing would still “touch matters” covered by the agreement. Torbit cited for support
 2 Simula, Inc. v. Autoliv, Inc., which stated, “To require arbitration . . . factual allegations need 3 only ‘touch matters’ covered by the contract containing the arbitration clause and all doubts are 4 to be resolved in favor of arbitrability.” 175 F.3d 716, 721 (9th Cir. 1999). In other words, 5 Torbit, relying on pre-Carlisle federal law, conflated the question of whether certain claims fall 6 within the scope of an arbitration agreement with the separate question of whether a 7 nonsignatory can enforce the agreement.

8 As explained, however, Goldman rejected this “touch matters” approach under 9 California law. 173 Cal. App. 4th at 220 (“[W]here the question is whether a particular party is 10 bound by the arbitration agreement, the liberal federal policy favoring arbitration agreements, 11 which is best understood as concerning the scope of arbitrable issues, is inapposite.” (citations 12 omitted, emphasis added)). Under California law, unlike in Torbit, mere reference to the terms 13 of an arbitration agreement is not enough for equitable estoppel to apply in favor of a 14 nonsignatory. See Kramer, 705 F.3d at 1129 (citing Goldman, 173 Cal. App. 4th at 218). Thus, 15 Waymo, unlike Torbit, can resist arbitration by showing that its claims for relief do not rely or 16 depend on the arbitration agreements in question here.

17 * * *

18 One final point of equity deserves mention. Defendants have repeatedly accused 19 Waymo of using “artful” or “tactical” pleading to evade its arbitration obligations by omitting 20 Levandowski as a defendant (see, e.g., Dkt. Nos. 125 at 9; 243 at 12). These accusations are 21 unwarranted. Waymo has honored its obligation to arbitrate against Levandowski by arbitrating 22 its claims (concerning employee poaching) against Levandowski. Its decision to bring separate 23 claims against defendants in court was not only reasonable but also the only course available, 24 since Waymo had no arbitration agreement with defendants. Even though he is not a defendant 25 here, moreover, Levandowski’s assertion of his Fifth Amendment privilege has obstructed and 26 continues to obstruct both discovery and defendants’ ability to construct a complete narrative as 27 to the fate of Waymo’s purloined files. As a practical matter, it is hard to imagine how 28

1 consolidating proceedings as to Levandowski and defendants, whether here or in arbitration, 2 could alleviate these difficulties.

3 CONCLUSION

4 For the foregoing reasons, defendants' motion to compel arbitration is DENIED.
